

DEBBIE's Mom

Even though my late mother had a memory between 1 and 7 days, the predators were sure she retained the status of limited competence. This way, they could isolate her while saying it was her "will." In Jan. 2013 I finally reached her and she indicated she was under duress and "would get into trouble" if "they" found out she had spoken with me. A few months later she was crippled due to neglect I had repeatedly warned all parties and agencies of. (DSHS APS refused to even interview her in private, away from those she had signed her entire estate over to.)

I mention this because the predators are well aware of the standards of NGA and have developed the above remedy to protect themselves. They included boiler plate copy from a full guardianship in the agreed limited guardianship order (which I did not even see until after the court approved it.) This lets them do the above isolate-and-grab and take all manner of excess without the legal liability they should have if it were the full guardianship it really is.